The COVID Impact Survey: Methodological Approach

The COVID Impact Survey is a rapid response, cross-sectional, nationwide, random-digit-dial (RDD) survey of adults in the continental United States, which tracks the impact of the coronavirus pandemic on the lives of Americans. The survey is fielded by the National Opinion Research Center (NORC) at the University of Chicago.

The COVID Impact Survey is a collaboration between NORC, the Coronavirus Research Group at the University of Chicago, and the Data Foundation. The survey is funded by the Data Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Ford Foundation, the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the Kaiser Family Foundation, the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, the Carnegie Corporation of New York, the Omidyar Network, the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, the Arnhold Foundation, the Ballmer Group, the Charles Koch Foundation, the Dobkin Family Foundation, the Eric and Wendy Schmidt Fund for Strategic Innovation, the Laura and John Arnold Foundation, the Leon Lowenstein Foundation, the Pew Charitable Trusts, the Stuart Family Foundation, the Tiger Global Foundation, the Walmart Foundation, the Wellcome Trust, and the William and Flora Hewlett Foundation.

Sample Design

The COVID Impact Survey uses random-digit-dial (RDD) sampling to ensure that every household in the United States has a chance of being selected for the survey. The RDD sample is supplemented with a small number of cases from a nationally representative, probability-based panel of households maintained by NORC, to ensure that the sample is representative of the U.S. adult population even as some people in the population do not have a landline phone.

Every week, the COVID Impact Survey fields a cross-sectional sample of approximately 1,000 adults. Each week's sample is independent of the samples from previous weeks. This allows us to track how the pandemic and related economic and public health responses are affecting the U.S. adult population as a whole, and how different subgroups within the population are affected in different ways.

Data Collection

Since March 30, 2020, the COVID Impact Survey has been conducted entirely by telephone. Trained interviewers from NORC's National Opinion Research Center (NORC) call sampled phone numbers to invite adults in those households to participate in the survey. Households that do not have a landline phone are also called on their cell phones. Households that do not have any phone are not included in the survey.

Interviews are conducted with people who do not have any telephone service in their household, including those who only have a cell phone. This allows us to include people who are homeless or who have had their phone disconnected for financial reasons in our sample. Households that do not have any phone are not included in the survey.

Response Rates

Response rates for the COVID Impact Survey are calculated using the standards and definitions set forth by the American Association for Public Opinion Research (AAPOR). The survey's response rate varies from week to week, but has been between 10 percent and 15 percent in most weeks. The survey's cooperation rate has been between 35 percent and 45 percent in most weeks. The survey's overall response rate and cooperation rate are lower than those of most other surveys because the COVID Impact Survey does not offer any incentives or compensation to participants.

Weighting

Each week's COVID Impact Survey sample is weighted to be representative of the U.S. adult population. The survey's weighting procedure adjusts for the probability of selection for each sampled household, and for the probability of a person within a household being selected to participate in the survey. The survey's weighting procedure also adjusts for the survey's sex, age, race/ethnicity, and geographic region distributions, to ensure that the survey's weighted sample matches the U.S. adult population in those dimensions. The survey's weighted sample also matches the U.S. adult population in terms of their educational attainment and their propensity to participate in surveys, based on a nationwide, probability-based sample of U.S. adults. The survey's weighted sample also matches the U.S. adult population in terms of their propensity to participate in surveys, based on a nationwide, probability-based sample of U.S. adults.

A Note on Analysing Weights

Because the COVID Impact Survey's weights include a propensity adjustment, researchers analyzing the survey's data should not use the survey's weights to estimate the size of the U.S. adult population. The survey's weights are designed to make the survey's sample representative of the U.S. adult population in many different dimensions, but they are not designed to make the survey's sample representative of the U.S. adult population in any one dimension. Researchers should use other, more appropriate, weights if they want to estimate the size of the U.S. adult population.

About the NORC at the University of Chicago

NORC at the University of Chicago is a leading research institute that conducts social and health research, delivers reliable data on a broad range of topics, and manages the operation of complex, technically demanding research projects. NORC's clients include government agencies, foundations, and businesses in the United States and abroad.

NORC's mission is to ensure that the right information is in the hands of people who need it to make decisions that improve the world.

About The Data Foundation

The Data Foundation is a non-profit, non-partisan, independent, 501(c)(3) research organization. The organization focuses on collecting and analyzing data related to government operations, and on using data to measure the performance of government programs and policies. The organization also promotes open government data and the creation of a National Data Infrastructure to make government data more accessible to researchers and the public.
